There is a significant amount of research supporting the link between home visitation and positive long-term outcomes for children, their families, and their communities. These benefits include, but are not limited to:

- Improved pregnancy outcomes for both mother and baby.
- Decreased rates of child abuse and neglect.
- Improved intellectual development
- Reduced childhood accidents (“unintentional injuries”) and hazards in the home, and fewer emergency room visits.
- Improved parenting skills and home environment.
- Stronger parent-child bonding.
- Decreases in behavioral problems, including sleep problems.
- Better detection and management of postpartum depression; and
- Increases in developmental screening.
